

The 11th World Summit on Counter Terrorism

September 13-14, 2011

Herzliya, Israel

The role of proactive measures and "targeted killings" in modern counter-terrorism strategies

Terrorism experts, scholars, decision-makers and legal experts are at odds with one another over the question of the effectiveness and morality of offensive action as a whole, and targeted killings in particular.

Ever since the 9/11 attacks, increasing numbers of states have found themselves in need of proactive counter-terrorism in order to thwart terror attacks and neutralize "ticking bombs". This workshop will deal with the various aspects and consequences of offensive counter-terrorism operations and targeted killings.
